

The Handoff

Stop collecting prompts. Half of them stopped working the moment the model changed or your task was slightly different from the one they were written for. What doesn't expire is what you say before you ask — think of it as briefing a capable new hire, not writing a prompt.

COPY-PASTE · THE HANDOFF

Situation: who this is for, why it matters now, what's riding on it.

Material: the actual raw stuff. Notes, thread, draft, last month's version.

Done: what finished looks like, in plain terms.

Your call vs mine: where it should use judgment, and what it must not decide.

- a Why part four is new. Two years ago models couldn't be trusted with judgment, so everyone learned to over-specify and lock everything down. The good ones can handle it now — but only if you say where it applies.
- b The line to remember. "Use your judgment on tone, don't touch the numbers" would have been a useless sentence two years ago. Today it's the difference between output you can send and output you have to rewrite.
- c What transfers. Different task, different week, same four questions. That's the part that doesn't expire when the next model ships.
